Overview

Medical information is an important and key element of drug safety. This programme has been designed for individuals and teams that answer medical enquiries as part of their daily work, as well as new medical information specialists who are starting a career in medical information. It will go through some important basic aspects and explain the legal requirements for a Marketing Authorisation Holder (MAH) to offer a medical information service in Europe. It will give practical information on how to provide an efficient medical service with linkage to other areas such as marketing, regulatory and drug safety. This programme provides essential guidance on various aspects of the important role of medical information.

Reviews

Graeme was brilliant, in particular his ability to use examples from personal experience, and that he could answer all our questions.
