Overview

Too often organisations' policies don't genuinely relate this to their day to day practice. They simply reflect what is formally required and they are only reviewed when it is formally necessary to do so. This results in there being no link between what is written in the policies and what is actually happening in the workplace on a day-to-day basis. Even though employees may read policies during their induction these policies are rarely seen as 'work instructions' or referred to again during day-to-day practice.

Policies need to be living, working documents. Processes are the essential vein between policies and practice, ensuring that the key components referred to in the policies are evident in practice.

Processes need to be a clear and accessible outline of what's meant to be done, how it's meant to be done, when it's meant to be done, where it's meant to be done, who's is responsible and who needs to be involved, and ultimately, why it is being done.

Benefits of attending

- Identify the core working policies that are needed in your organisation
- Ensure policies are 'live', current, working documents
- Regularly review policies to guarantee they genuinely relate this to day-to-day practice
- Link what is written in the policies to what is actually happening in the workplace on a day-to-day basis
- Establish the importance of processes as the essential vein between policies and practice
- Create clear and accessible processes that provide the benchmark for best practice
- Outline what's meant to be done, how it's meant to be done, when it's meant to be done, where it's meant to be done, who's is responsible and who needs to be involved, and ultimately, why it is being done
- Effectively communicate process flow charts to employees and establish a system of regular observations to ensure that they are following the process flow chart
- Involve employees in the review of each process flow chart
- Encourage employees to contribute to the ongoing update and development of the process flow charts and the introduction of new flow chart

Who should attend?

This session is relevant for existing leaders and managers, as well as those new or aspiring to a management role, who want to achieve greater success by enhancing their leadership skills through adopting a compassionate approach.

Presenter

Claire Mould

With over thirty years' experience of working in and with the public, corporate, and charitable sectors, Claire has expertise in providing strategic, analytical, emotionally intelligent solutions that engender, inform, facilitate and embed growth through compassionate leadership.

Extending from post-doctoral studies on neurology, specifically the link between emotional intelligence and cognitive intelligence, Claire has written, presented, and worked at a national, European, and international level and has published several research papers and books.

In her previous time as a CEO of various charities, she has practical experience in the art of compassionate leadership and has developed a real passion for helping individuals and organisations to optimise their growth potential.

In addition to her work as a facilitator, delivering sessions and presenting, Claire also works as an independent consultant providing emotionally intelligent strategic solutions, embedding compassionate leadership and maximising growth.

In her spare time, Claire runs for mental health and wellbeing, including running marathons and ultra marathons.
