Talk overview

From the back streets of Earls Barton to the bright lights of Broadway, Steve Pateman tells the extraordinary true story of how he saved his family shoe factory by stepping into an entirely unexpected market.

Starting work at W J Brookes at 17, Steve learned his craft under his father before taking over the business. When the traditional shoe trade collapsed, he turned to a niche market that transformed his life and career: producing kinky boots for the transvestite and transgender community.

His journey was captured in the BBC2 documentary, 'The Kinky Boot Factory', adapted into the 2005 film, 'Kinky Boots', and ultimately became a Tony Award–winning Broadway musical. Steve's story is more than entertainment – it's a powerful case study in resilience, creativity, and business.

Presenter

Steve Pateman

Steve Pateman is renowned for his anecdotes from how he went from Earls Barton to Broadway. Starting in the family shoe business, W J Brookes, straight from school at the age of 17, he learnt the trade from his father, eventually taking over the running of the factory when his farther retired. When a down turn in the shoe industry led Steve to look to new ideas he stumbled into the market of making kinky boots for the transvestites and transgender community. A series of events then led him into a world of new experiences, people and celebrities, as well as becoming a television star BBC2 programme, 'The Kinky Boot Factory' – with shaving his legs and learning to walk in six-inch stiletto heels were just two of the things he did to save his family business. The programme caught the attention of film-makers and in 2005, it became the film, Kinky Boots. Now the New York stage version has won the Tony award for Best Musical.
